Grief Management:
with Rev. William Chittester B.S., MDiv, CT
1 CEU
January 24-25, 2011

There are a lot of grieving people in our communities and in our churches. They carry a tremendous weight and they do not always know where to go for help. Our churches can provide that place.

In this workshop Rev. William "Mick" Chittester will provide insight on healthy mourning practices for those who are so often directly involved in helping others through a time of loss.

Rev. Chittester has conducted workshops and seminars for clergy, professional development, and grieving families. He has also presented training for guidance counselors at the public schools and at Intermediate Unit in-service days. In addition to workshops and one on one consultation, he teaches grief management classes for those who are adjusting to loss.

Certified nationally through A.D.E.C. in Thanatology (the academic, and often scientific, study of death among human beings). Rev Chittester is a graduate of Penn State University, College of Human Development with a B.S. in Individual and Family Studies and an emphasis in Gerontology (Study of Aging). He received a Masters of Divinity from Pittsburgh Theological Seminary, and completed certification in Grief Recovery course work from Akron Grief recovery Institute. As part of his continuing education efforts, Rev. Chittester is currently enrolled at the University of Alabama's Thanatology course studies.

Grief Resources provides seminars and classes in grief management classes and end of life decision making. One on one or small group consultations are also available.
